SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

The Consumer Financial Protection Act of 2010 (Act) lists “conducting financial education programs” as one of six primary functions of the Bureau. One of the Bureau's statutory objectives under the Act is to ensure that, with respect to consumer financial products and services, “consumers are provided with timely and understandable information to make responsible decisions about financial transactions.” The Act directs the Bureau to develop and implement “initiatives intended to educate and empower consumers to make better informed financial decisions.” The Act also directs the Bureau to develop and implement a strategy to improve consumers' financial literacy by, among other things, providing opportunities for consumers to access information and resources related to a range of financial topics including credit products, histories, and scores; savings, borrowing and other services found at mainstream financial institutions; preparing for major purchases such as education; debt reduction; improving the consumer's financial situation; the development of long-term savings strategies; and wealth-building. Pursuant to the Act, the Bureau develops programs to serve the general public, as well as specific populations, including servicemembers, veterans and their families, older Americans, students, and traditionally underserved consumers.

The Bureau conducts various financial education programs covering a range of financial topics. Currently, the Bureau offers information directly to Americans through the Bureau's website and indirectly through community channels, such as libraries and social service agencies. The topics covered on the Bureau's website and through its print publications include mortgages, credit reporting, student loans, debt collection, and bank accounts. The Bureau has also created guides for specific financial decisions, including Buying a House, Paying for College, and Planning for Retirement. The Bureau also focuses on providing information to specific audiences, including older Americans, families, students and servicemembers. The Bureau also provides financial educators with tools, research, webinars, training, and tips on delivering financial education and on ways to measure and increase the financial well-being of the people served through financial education. The Bureau has contracted with outside entities to support specific elements of the Bureau's financial education work.

The Bureau uses various metrics to measure the reach and effectiveness of its financial education work, including the number of consumers and financial educators using the Bureau's information and tools, qualitative user feedback, increased understanding of certain topics, and user satisfaction ratings. The Bureau has also developed an evidence-based scale to measure financial well-being as an outcome of financial education programs. The Bureau has used this scale to conduct a National Financial Well-being Survey. The scale and underlying research are also available for financial educators to use as they measure their own programs.

The Bureau is a member of the federal Financial Literacy and Education Commission (FLEC), and the Bureau's Director is the Vice-Chair of FLEC. The Bureau has coordinated with other Federal agencies to deliver financial education, such as cooperating with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) to create Money Smart for Older Adults.

OVERVIEW OF THIS REQUEST FOR INFORMATION:

The Bureau is using this request for information to seek public input regarding the efficiency and effectiveness of the Bureau's financial education programs, including its focus on various topics, programs, delivery channels and methods, the use of technology, and the use of the procurement process to support its work. The Bureau encourages comments from all interested members of the public. The Bureau anticipates that the responding public may include individual consumers, financial educators, members of industry, consumer advocates, researchers or members of academia, state and local officials, and others. This RFI is not the vehicle to express interest in contracting with the Bureau. Additionally, the Bureau does not provide grants.
